THE plan of this Work is extensive beyond any thing that has yet been attempted of the kind in the English Language. It was intended to introduce not only all the appellatives or common words, whether radical, derivative or compound, obsolete, cant or provincial; but all proper names of men and women, heathen gods and goddesses, heroes, princes, poets, historians, wise men and philosophers of special note, whether ancient or modern: Of all the principal kingdoms, cities, towns, seas and rivers in the known world, more especially in Great Britain and Ireland: Of beasts, birds, fishes and insects: Of trees, plants, herbs, minerals and fossils. The terms of art in chymistry, pharmacy, heraldry, divinity, mathematics, mechanics, manufactures and husbandry. The derivations from the ancient, modern and learned languages, in which special attention has been given to the mere English scholar, by a proper analysis and full explanation of the originals. The various senses, with the use and construction illustrated by examples, and supported by authorities where any thing appeared to be uncommon or doubtful. The pronunciation pointed out, and assisted by a new method of placing the accent, and by notes on the sounds of the letters where it was judged necessary. The different spellings preserved and distinguished as ancient or modern, common or uncommon, correct or incorrect: and, in a word, every thing which might be thought requisite to render the work worthy of the title it bears, and under which it is now recommended to the public. And all this to be comprised in as narrow a compass as possible, lest the size should supersede the intention of general usefulness, and acceptance to the English reader.

The execution of a plan so very extensive, and yet in some respects limited, must doubtless have failed in some particulars. Errata of the press and other trifling defects, in a work of this nature, could not be avoided. The compounds and transmutations of the English Language are exceedingly numerous; almost any adjective, by an ellipsis, is converted into a substantive, and almost any substantive, by a kind of composition, is transformed into an adjective. All which compounds and transmutations could not well be collected: they have been and are still fabricated by the caprice or different cast of the writers who use them; and are, perhaps, capable of an endless variety. The obsolete spellings from Chaucer, and other cotemporary authors, might have been greatly increased, but those which are here introduced, may be thought, perhaps, more than sufficient to illustrate the orthography of that period. Nor was it thought necessary or expedient to rake into the mere cant of any profession, much less of gamesters, highwaymen, pickpockets and gipsies.

The final k, after c, in words derived from the learned languages, though carefully retained by Johnson and other writers, has been omitted, in conformity to modern custom and the originals. For it seems to me to be rather incongruous to write musick from musica, especially as the k has been exploded by general consent from the derivatives musician and musical. The use of the hyphen in compound words has, of late, been much discontinued. It has an awkward appearance in many instances, and is therefore generally omitted in this compilation.

The derivations, for the most part, have been illustrated from the roots of the originals, though the words to be explained might in some few instances be more nearly allied to the offspring. For example, when a word comes immediately mediately from the French, and the French from the Latin, the latter has been preferred to the former. And when any word is introduced from the Saxon, the Latin or any other language, without an exemplar, it is to be taken for granted that the spelling in both languages is precisely coincident. Where the root is obsolete, incorrect, local, &c. the derivatives have been generally omitted; and where the original has precisely the same signification with the word derived from it, a particular explanation was judged unnecessary.

To avoid a too frequent recurrence to foreign originals, the words of a cognate signification, or such as come from the same root, are not always referred to that root or to its offspring in the same language, but are frequently noted as derived from each other, especially when there is any resemblance or analogy to countenance such a notation.

The difficulty of explaining a variety of words in common use, many of which have numerous, collateral, and yet different senses, and many of these better felt than described, will, it is hoped, apologize for any obscurity, bombast, tautology, or inelegance of expression which may be observed in the explanation.

As this dictionary is designed for general use, some will doubtless think there has been too much, and others, perhaps, that there has been too little precision observed in this compilation. The work, however, such as it is, the author now ventures into the world, hoping he has but little to fear from the manly criticism of the true scholar, and still less from the known candour of the impartial public.

As a work of this nature must of necessity take up a great deal of time in printing, it was thought requisite to go to the press before the manuscript copy was quite completed. From this circumstance a few words, which have since occurred to the compiler, and which could not be inserted in the body of the work, are added by way of Supplement.

The defects of common dictionaries have long been felt. A work on this plan has been much desired. The author has endeavoured to render it as complete as possible. He has introduced, either in the body of the work or in the Supplement, all the words he could find or remember. But the copiousness of the English Language, as might well be expected, leaves him short of that perfection which the plan seems to require: and therefore, after all that has been done, he seeks his apology and his consolation in that well known adage:

“ To err is human, to forgive divine.”

GRAMMATICAL DISSERTATIONS;

OR,

A Comprehensive GRAMMAR of the ENGLISH TONGUE.

DISSERTATION I.

On the Sounds of the Letters in the English Alphabet.

SOUNDS are fugitive things, hard to catch, and difficult to retain; and therefore it is no wonder so much should have been said, with so little agreement, by those learned writers who have professedly treated on this subject.

I think it must be allowed, that the possible, and perhaps the actual, sounds of the vowels in the English alphabet will admit of an endless variety. But it is the felicity of the English language, that the far greater part of these different sounds are too trifling to be worthy of notice.

The whole octave or practical scale of music admits but of twelve distinct sounds called semi tones; and though there must be, according to the nature of the scale, an infinite gradation of sounds between each of these intervals; yet they are all judged too minute to be reduced to practice. Just so it is with the sounds of the English vowels; and that not merely by a provincial or corrupt pronunciation, but as used by real scholars, and, if I am not greatly mistaken, by the polished speakers in the metropolis itself.

Nor is there any great inconveniency arising from this variety of sounds, for in unaccented, short, and insignificant syllables, the sounds of the five vowels in pronunciation will be found nearly coincident. It must be a nice ear that can distinguish the difference of sound in the concluding syllable of the following words. Altar, alter, manor, murmur, satyr.

The rules of proper pronunciation, so far as they respect the distinct and different sounds of the vowels, may be reduced to a small number. The epithets short and long have been introduced with evident impropriety; for a long sound, properly speaking, is nothing more than a short sound increased in quantity, or drawn out to a greater length in pronunciation. The broad and the narrow are certainly more expressive; and, if we want a further distinction, let it be called the middle or intermediate.

Thus the first letter or vowel in the alphabet, will be found to have three distinct sounds: as in the words, all, an, ale. The two last I call the proper sounds of this letter, because they belong to this single letter and to no other. These, therefore, should be carefully noted, and kept as distinct and pure as possible. ā; a; æ

The second vowel has likewise three sounds; as in the words, them, the, me. The first and second are the proper sounds of this letter, and are both sufficiently distinguished from the last: for I cannot be persuaded to think, that the e in the and me, and the ee in thee, which is the same thing, are to be sounded exactly alike. It is confessed, that among fine speakers, especially in London, there is a prevailing affectation of confounding these two sounds, or rather of losing the second in the last; and this perhaps may be considered, pardon the expression, as one of the provincial modes of pronunciation in the metropolis. For want of this distinction, however, many words are confounded in the English language, which seem to have a sufficient claim to be distinguished: such as, thee, the; meet, meat; beet, beat; and many others that might be enumerated. Before I dismiss this article, I beg leave to mention what I look upon to be another corrupt mode of pronunciation in London. It is that in which the first sound of this letter is converted into that of the broad u; as though the sound of the e in ber, and that of u in cur were exactly coincident. I will only add that the middle sound of the e, for which I have been contending, is, or at least, ought to be, retained in the words, bero, rebuild, refrain, adhesion, cohesion, and others of a like formation. Would it not be best likewise to retain the first and proper sound of the e in hermetical, bernia, hermaphrodite, and many others that might be mentioned? ē; eu ou; i

The third vowel has likewise three distinct sounds; as in the words, bind, bird, bill. The first of these is the proper sound, the second being coincident with that of the full u, and the third with that of the narrow e. ai; o; i

The o has, I think, four distinct sounds; as in the words, cloth, ton, tone, tomb. The third is the proper sound of this vowel; the first being found to coincide with the broad a, the second with the broad, and the fourth with the narrow u. ā; o; ō; u iou, ou. The u has three distinct sounds; as in the words us, use, rule. The middle is the proper sound of this vowel, the first coincides with the second, and the third with the fourth sound of the o.

The y, as a vowel, may be considered in sound as the substitute of the i.

Thus we have what may be called the proper sounds of the vowels, which are seven in number; two of the a, two of the e, one of the i, one of the o, and one of the u. But in order to see which other vocal sounds are to be distinguished in the English language, we must have recourse to the various combinations of the vowels used in the formation of syllables. (proper i, a; 2, ai; 3, e; 4, eu; 5, ai; 6, o; 7, iou. common a, i, o, ou.)

The æ has one sound: as in Cæsar, and coincides with the middle sound of the e, or rather with that of the narrow i.

The ai has perhaps but one sound: as in the words, praise, fail, quail, and seems to be one of the proper diphthongs as comprising the sounds of the two vowels.

The au has three sounds: as in the words, author, aunt, gauge. These respectively coincide with the broad, middle, and narrow sounds of the letter a.

The aw has one sound: as in the word, awl, which corresponds with the broad a.

Ay has one sound: as in bay, lay, which coincides with the sound of the ai.

EA has three sounds: as in the words, heart, heaven, seat. The first coincides with the middle sound of the a, the second is perhaps best distinguished by that kind of uncertain sound which any of the vowels may acquire in a short or insignificant syllable, and the last coincides with the middle e.

EE has one sound: as in see, thee, and coincides with the narrow i.

EI has two sounds: as in weight, deceit. The first coincides with the ai, and may be considered as another proper diphthong, the second corresponds to the narrow i.

EO has three sounds: as in the words, George, leopard, people. The first coincides with the broad o, the second with the broad e, and the third with the narrow i.

EU has one sound: as in few, and coincides with the middle u. EW has likewise one sound, as in few, which coincides with the proper sound of the u.

EY has two sounds: as in the words, eyre, and rey. The first coincides with the broad, and the second with the narrow i.

IE has three sounds: ie, friend, chief. The first coincides with the broad i, the second with the middle e, and the last with the narrow i.

OA has two sounds: as in broad, boat. The first coincides with the broad a, the second with the proper sound of the o.

OI has one sound: as in oil, toil, and makes what we may call another proper diphthong.

OO has three sounds: as in the words, floor, froud, fool. The first coincides with the proper sound of the o, the second with the broad, and the third with the narrow u.

OW has two sounds: as know, now. The first coincides with the proper o, and the last is the sound of a proper diphthong.

OE has one sound: as in Phœbe, and coincides with the middle e, or otherwise with that of the narrow i.

OU has three sounds: as in noun, could, though. The first coincides with the ow, the second with the broad u, and the last with the proper sound of the o.

OY has one sound: as in boy, joy, and is a proper diphthong.

UA has two sounds: as in the words guard, persuade. The first coincides with the middle, and the second with the narrow sound of the a.

UE has one sound: as in true, and coincides with the narrow u.

UI has three sounds: as in the words, guide, build, fruit. The first coincides with the proper sound of the i, the second with the narrow i, and the third with the narrow u.

EAU has two sounds: as in the words, beauty, beau. The first corresponds with the proper sound of the u, the other with the proper sound of the o.

IEU has two sounds: as in lieu, lieutenant, unless the last may be rather considered as a corruption. The first coincides with the narrow u, the last has the sound of if.

From the foregoing observations, in which I have endeavoured, as much as possible, to divest myself of all provincial modes of pronunciation both in town and country; we may deduce the following table.

A broad, O broad, au, aw, oa.	-	Ball, cloth, call, awl, broad.
A middle proper, au, ea.	-	At, aunt, heart.
A narrow proper, ea.	-	Gale, gauge.
E broad proper, ea.	-	Hem, head.
E middle proper, ie.	-	The, friend.
I narrow, E narrow, ee, ei, æ, œ.	-	Mill, me, meet, deceit, Cæsar, Phœbe.
I broad proper, y, ie, ye.	-	Bind, by, fie, pye.
O proper, oa, eu, ow, eau.	-	Bone, boat, soul, blow, beau.

U proper, eau .	-	-	-	Use, beauty.
U broad, O middle, I middle, oo .	-	-	-	Cud, ton, bird, blood.
U narrow, O narrow, ou , ieu , oo .	-	-	-	Rule, tomb, could, lieu, too.
AI , AY , EI , proper.	-	-	-	Laid, prayed, weighed.
OI , OY , proper.	-	-	-	Oil, toil, joy.
OU , OW , proper.	-	-	-	Noun, now.

C has two modifications, the hard, and the soft: as in cull, cell. It is always hard, like k, before a, o, u, and all consonants, and at the end of words: as, call, coal, cut, public. But soft, like s, before i, e, and y: as in cit, cease, cypress.

G has likewise a hard and a soft modification: as in gun, gin. It is always hard before a, o, u, and all consonants, and at the end of words: as in get, got, gut, glad, jug. For the most part, soft before e, i, and y: as in gem, gill, clergy. But all proper names in the Bible have g hard before e, and i: as in Gera, Gilboa: g is likewise hard in many English words before e, and i: as in geese, geld, get, gear, girl, give, giddy, dagger, anger; and in many more which may be supplied by observation.

CH has one hard, and two soft modifications: as in Baruch, arch, chaise. The first prevails in words of Hebrew and Greek original, and the last in such as come from the French.

PH, when joined in the same syllable, is sounded like f: as in Asaph, elephant.

S has two modifications, a short, and a flat: as in this, those. The flat sound prevails in all words made plural or increased by the addition of s: as in pins, foxes, loves.

TH has likewise a sharp and a flat sound: as in thin, thine.

TI before a vowel is frequently softened down to sh: as in station, nation, in which the i is nearly if not quite lost.

W, when used as a vowel, has the sound of u: as in few, new; but when used as a consonant it has a sound peculiar to itself: as in we, William.

N. B. The other consonants have little or no variation.

DISSERTATION II.

On the Parts of Speech, and the Inflections of Words.

THE kinds of words, or parts of speech, in the English language, are ten. Article, substantive, adjective, pronoun, verb, participle, adverb, conjunction, preposition and interjection.

The Latin Grammarians, without the article, which they have not in their Language, make eight parts of speech, confounding the substantive and adjective, under the common name of a noun: but this is a manifest impropriety. The substantive and the adjective are certainly as distinct parts of speech as the noun and the pronoun, or the verb and the adverb. Several other distributions have been proposed by different English authors, which we need not enumerate. And one very ingenious writer seems to give it as his opinion that all divisions on this subject are equally uncertain and arbitrary. But notwithstanding this, it is presumed, the division given above will be found, on the maturest deliberation, to have a precision which cannot well be controverted.

Of an ARTICLE.

An article is a part of speech set before nouns to fix their vague signification: as a man, the man; an house, the house. The articles are a, an, and the.

Of a NOUN.

A Noun, or substantive, is the name of any person, place, or thing: as John, London, honour, goodness.

There are two numbers; the singular, which speaks of one: as a man, a troop: and the plural, which speaks of more than one: as, men, troops. The plural is usually formed by adding s to the singular: as, noun, nouns; verb, verbs.

When the singular ends in s, x, ch, or sh, the plural is formed by adding the syllable es: as, miss, misses; box, boxes; peach, peaches; brush, brushes. When the singular ends in y with a consonant before it, the plural is formed by changing the y into ies: as, lady, ladies; cherry, cherries. When the singular ends in f, or fe, the plural is formed by changing the f, or fe, into ves: as, life, lives; half, halves, &c. except dwarf, grief, hoof, muff, &c. which take s, to make the plural. Sometimes the plural is formed by adding the syllable en: as, ox, oxen: sometimes by changing the vowel: as, man, men: and sometimes by changing the vowels, and consonants: as, penny, pence; mouse, mice. Some few words, coming immediately from the Hebrew, form the plural by adding im to the singular: as, cherub, cherubim; seraph, seraphim. Some from the Greek, ending in on, change the on into a: as, phænomenon, phænomena. Some from the Latin in us, change the us into i: as, radius, radii; magus, magi. Some nouns have no plural: as, sheep, &c. others no singular: as, ashes, &c. and some are the same in both numbers: as, sheep, &c.

&c. There are two genders; the masculine, and the feminine. The masculine denotes the he-kind: as, a man, a prince. The feminine denotes the she-kind: as, a woman, a princess. Nouns signifying things without life, are properly of no gender: as, a pen, a table.

By a common figure in the English tongue, the sun is of the masculine; the moon, the church, ships, and frequently countries and virtues, such as France, Spain, faith, hope, &c. are of the feminine gender.

Here likewise it may be necessary to observe,

Masculine.	Feminine.	Masculine.	Feminine.	Masculine.	Feminine.

Nouns have two cases; the nominative, and the genitive: the genitive case is formed by adding s, with an apostrophe, to the nominative: as, men, men's; ox, ox's.

NOTE. In the formation of this case I have complied with a late refinement; and what I really think a corrupt custom. The genitive case, in my opinion, might be much more properly formed by adding s, or, when the pronunciation requires it, es, without an apostrophe: as, men, mens; ox, oxes; horse, horses; ass, asses.

This case undoubtedly came from the Saxon, and the best English writers after the Norman Conquest, even down to the times of Chaucer and the Reformation, formed it just in the same manner they did the plural number, viz. by the addition of s, es, or is, and were rather sparing in the use of it. After that the is and es were discontinued by degrees, though the latter, in a few instances, is retained to this day in our version of the Bible.

As to the apostrophe, it was seldom used to distinguish the genitive case till about the beginning of the present century, and then seems to have been introduced by mistake. At that time the genitive case was supposed to have had its original from a contraction: as, John's book, for John his book: but that notion has been sufficiently exploded: and therefore the use of the apostrophe, especially in those instances where the pronunciation requires an additional syllable, is, I presume, quite indefensible. To write ox's, ass's, fox's, and at the same time pronounce it oxes, asses, foxes, is such a departure from the original formation, at least in writing, and such an inconsistent use of the apostrophe as cannot be equalled perhaps in any other language; and though it may be said that the apostrophe has some propriety as a note of distinction, yet no one, I think, who has any knowledge of grammar, can well mistake the plural number for the genitive case. However, it appears to me, at present, to be a distinction of very little importance. Formerly there were notes used to distinguish the ablative case singular, of Latin nouns of the first declension, and the genitive of the fourth, which are now laid aside by correct writers, and I cannot but think that, sometime or other, this will be the fate of the apostrophe in the genitive case.

Of an ADJECTIVE.

An adjective is a word that signifies the quality of any person, place, or thing: as, a good man, a great city, a fine house.

Most adjectives have, at least, two degrees of comparison; which are commonly called the comparative, and the superlative.

The comparative is formed, for the most part, by adding er to the positive: as, long, longer; short, shorter: the superlative by adding est: as, long, longest, &c.

NOTE. Long is the positive state of the adjective; and therefore, as many authors observe, cannot be properly called a step or degree.

These degrees of comparison are frequently formed by the adverbs, very, infinitely, more, most, less, least: as, more short, very most, or infinitely short; less common, least common, &c. There are a few adjectives peculiar in their comparison: as, good, better, best; bad, worse, worst, &c.

Of a P R O N O U N.

A Pronoun is a word used instead of a noun, to avoid the too frequent repetition of the same word : as, "The man is merry, he laughs, he sings."

The following pronouns (it only excepted) have three cases ; nominative, genitive, and accusative, in each number.

Sing.			Plu.			Singular.
Nom.	Gen.	Acc.	Nom.	Gen.	Acc.	Nom.	Gen.	Acc.
I	mine, my	me	We	ours, our	us	He	his	him
Thou	thine, thy	thee	Ye, you	yours, your	you	She	hers, her	her
						It	its

NOTE. Some Grammarians would have mine, thine, ours, yours, &c. to be the only genitive cases of the primitive pronouns ; and my, thy, &c. to be pronominal adjectives derived from them ; but as his, and its, which are confessedly genitive cases, are joined to nouns as well as my, thy, &c. I thought best to range them as I have done above, and shall provide for the proper use of each variation in the rules of syntax.

Plural.			The following have,

Pronominal adjectives, such as ten, forty, fifty, &c. and some others, seem to have a genitive case regularly formed by adding s to the nominative ; as, ten, tens.

NOTE. The other pronouns, which, what, &c. have no variation.

Of a V E R B.

A Verb is a word that signifies the acting, or being of a person, place, or thing : as, the man calls, the city stands, the tree falls, I am. The verb that signifies merely being is neuter : as, I am, he is : verbs that signify doing are active : as, I speaking the word, I wrote the letter.

NOTE. Properly speaking, there is no passive verb in the English language ; for though I am loved, is commonly called a passive verb, yet loved is no part of the verb, but a participle, or adjective derived of the verb, love.

I am very sensible, that the greatest man*, perhaps, that ever yet wrote on this subject, is of a different opinion. He says, "There are three kinds of verbs ; active, passive, and neuter." And when he comes to the grammatical resolution of this sentence, "In whom I am well pleased," he tells us, that am is "the indicative mode, present time, and first person singular of the neuter verb, to be ; well, an adverb ; pleased, the passive participle of the verb to please, making with the auxiliary verb am, a passive verb." The consideration of this, I must confess, could by no means induce me to suppress the above Note. In parsing, every word should be considered as a distinct part of speech ; for, though two or more words may be united to form a mode, a tense, or a comparison ; yet, it seems quite improper to unite two or more words to make a noun, a verb, an adjective, &c.

Verbs intransitive, or such as do not pass over or convey their force to any object : as, sleep, walk, run, &c. are commonly, though perhaps not very properly, called neuter verbs.

The noun or pronoun that stands before the active verbs in the above examples, may be called the agent, and that which stands before the neuter the subject of the verb : but the noun or pronoun that follows the active verbs, in the same examples, may be called the object of the verb.

There are four modes, or ways of using the verb ; the indicative, the imperative, the potential, and the infinitive. The indicative expresses the action or being, directly and absolutely : as, I am, he loves. The imperative commands or forbids : as, come, go, fear him, love him. The potential expresses the action or being as possible, or impossible, fit, or unfit : as, I may love, I may not love. The infinitive expresses the action or being indeterminately : as, to be, to love.

The

* Dr. Lowth, followed by Buchanan.

The potential mode, or form of the verb, does not, I think, in any case coincide with the indicative. It always has some respect to the power, will, &c. of the agent, by which, even when conditionality is out of the question, it is distinguished from the merely declarative form: the one declares the action done or to be done, without any further consideration; the other declares not the action done or to be done, but the ability, inability, &c. of the agent to perform that action; and is therefore properly stiled the potential mode.

There are five tenses, or times; the present, the imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, and the future. The present expresses the time that now is: as, I love; or am loving. The imperfect denotes the time past indeterminately: as, I loved; or, was loving. The perfect denotes the time past determinately; as, I have loved; or, have been loving. The pluperfect denotes the time past as prior to some other point of time specified in the sentence: as, I had loved; or, had been loving. The future denotes the time to come: as, I will or shall love; or, will or shall be loving.

NOTE. These formations of the several tenses seem to have respect both to the time and state of the action signified by the verb. The present tense denotes the time that now is, and the action unfinished: as, I write; or, I am now writing the letter. The imperfect denotes the time past indeterminately, and the action to have been compleated at any past time that may be specified: as, I wrote the letter; or, I began and finished the writing of the letter, this morning, yesterday, a week ago, &c. The perfect denotes the time just past, and the action fully compleated: as, I have written the letter; or I have just now finished the writing of the letter. The pluperfect denotes the time past, and the action to have been compleated prior to some other circumstance specified in the sentence: as, I had written the letter; or, I had finished the writing of the letter before you came in. The future denotes the time to come and the action to be compleated at any future time that may be mentioned: as, I will write the letter; or, I will begin and finish the writing of the letter, to-night, to-morrow, &c.

The other forms of these tenses, viz. I am writing, I was writing, I have been writing, I had been writing, I will be writing, seem for the most part to leave the action undetermined.

These modes and tenses are partly formed by the verb itself, and partly by the assistance of signs. There are two modes formed from the verb itself; the indicative: as, I love; and the imperative: as, love thou: and likewise two tenses; the present: as, I love; and the past: as, I loved.

The auxiliary signs are, to, do, did, have, had, shall, will, may, can, must, might, would, could, should. To, is a sign of the infinitive mode: as, to be; to love. May, can, must, might, would, could, should, and their inflexions, mayest, canst, mightest, wouldest, couldest, shouldest, are signs of the potential mode. Do, and its inflexions, dost, doth, or does, are signs of the present tense. Did, and its inflexion, didst, are signs of the imperfect tense. Have, and its inflexions, hast, hath, or has, are signs of the perfect tense. Had, and its inflexion, hadst, are signs of the pluperfect tense. Shall, and will, and their inflexions, shalt, and wilt, are signs of the future tense.

NOTE, the auxiliary signs seem to have the nature of adverbs.

Do, have, and will, when they are not joined to verbs to distinguish the circumstance of time, are absolutely verbs: as, I do it, I have it, I will it.

In verbs there is a reference to three persons in each number: as, singular, I love, thou lovest, he loveth; plural, we love, ye love, they love. The second person of the verb in the singular number is formed out of the first by adding est, or st; the third by adding, eth th, es, or only s. St or th is added instead of est, and eth, to verbs ending in e: as, love, lovest: es to such as end in ss, x, or o: as fix, fixes; pass, passes; go, goes. When est or eth is added to a verb ending in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel bearing the accent, that consonant is doubled: as, forget, forgettest, forgetteth. The first person speaks of himself: as, "I John take thee Elizabeth." The second person has the speech directed to him, and is supposed to be present: as, "Thou Harry art a wicked fellow." The third person is spoken of or described, and supposed to be absent: as, "That Thomas is a good man."

The verb itself has but two terminations respecting time: as, love, and loved; which last may be called the inflexion of the preter, or past tense: and when this inflexion of the preter tense is formed by adding d, or ed, to the first person present tense, the verb is regular, and is declined after the following examples.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I love or do love, thou lovest or dost love, he loveth or loves, or doth or does love. Plu. We love or do love, ye love or do love, they love or do love.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I loved or did love, thou lovedst or didst love, he loved or did love. Plu. We loved or did love, ye loved or did love, they loved or did love.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have loved, thou hast loved, he hath loved. Plu. We have loved, ye have loved, they have loved.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had loved, thou hadst loved, he had loved. Plu. We had loved, ye had loved, they had loved.

Future Tense. Sing. I shall or will love, thou shalt or wilt love, he shall or will love. Plu. We shall or will love, ye shall or will love, they shall or will love.

Some

Some verbs in this mode will admit of a second future, especially such as signify the completing of any thing: as, I shall or will have finished it to-morrow.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Love, do thou love, or love thou. Plu. Love, do ye love, or love ye.

NOTE. Let, commonly called a sign of the imperative mode, is properly a verb in that mode: as, in the example, let him love, the meaning is permit, or suffer him to love: let, therefore, seems to be a verb of the imperative, and love, of the infinite mode, the sign, to, being understood, though not expressed.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I must, may, can, would, could, or should love, thou must, mayest, canst, wouldst, couldst, or shouldest love, he must, may, can, would, could, or should love. Plu. We must, may, can, would, could, or should love, ye, &c.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I must, might, would, could, or should have loved, thou must, mightest, wouldst, couldst, or shouldest have loved, he must, might, would, could, or should have loved. Plu. We must, might, would, could, or should have loved, ye, &c.

The pluperfect tense, in this mode, is best expressed by the perfect: as, I might have loved her before the time you mention.

The future tense, of most verbs, in this mode, is best expressed by the present: as, I may love to-morrow.

There is a subjunctive or conditional form which drops the personal terminations in certain tenses of this mode: as, though thou love, though he love.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Present tense, to love; perfect, to have loved; future, about to love.

THE DECLENSION OF THE NEUTER VERB
INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I am, thou art, he is. Plu. We are, ye are, they are.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I was, thou wast, he was. Plu. We were, ye were, they were.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have been, thou hast been, he hath, or has been. Plu. We have been, ye have been, they have been.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had been, thou hadst been, he had been. Plu. We had been, ye had been, they had been.

Future Tense. Sing. I shall or will be, thou shalt or wilt be, he shall or will be. Plu. We shall or will be, ye shall or will be, &c.

Second Future. Sing. I shall or will have been, &c.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Be, do thou be, or, be thou. Plu. Be, do ye be, or, be ye.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I must, may, can, would, could, or should be, thou must, mayest, canst, wouldst, couldst, or shouldest be. Plu. We must, may, can, would, could, or should be, ye, &c.

Perfect and pluperfect tenses. Sing. I must, might, would, could, or should have been, thou must, mightest, wouldst, couldst, or shouldest have been, he must, might, would, could, or should have been. Plu. We must, might, would, could, or should have been, ye, &c.

The future tense, in this mode, is best expressed by the present: as, I may be to-morrow.

The subjunctive form of this verb, is thus distinguished:

Present Tense. Sing. Though I be, though thou be, though he be. Plu. Though we be, though ye be, though they be.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. Though I were, though thou wert, though he were. Plu. Though we were, though ye were, though they were.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Present, to be; perfect, to have been; future, about to be.

When the termination of the preter tense is not formed by adding d, or ed, to the first person of the present tense singular, the verb may be called irregular; but that irregularity being discovered and observed in the preter tenses, the verb is declined, in all other respects, as the regular verb.

The most common irregularity is when the d or ed, for better sound's sake, is changed into t; and this is, for the most part, the case, when the verb itself ends in f, p, and x: as, putt, wrapt, and mixt; for puffed, wrapped, and mixed, &c.

NOTE. The same irregularity, or contraction, frequently occurs in verbs of other terminations.

THE DECLENSION OF IRREGULAR AND DEFECTIVE VERBS.

To write.
Present Write Preter Wrote Parti. Written.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I wrote or did write, thou wrotest or didst write, he wrote or did write. Plu. We wrote or did write, ye wrote or did write, they wrote or did write.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have wrote or have written, thou hast wrote or hast written, he hath or has wrote, or hath or has written. Plu. We have wrote or have written, ye have wrote or have written, they have wrote or have written.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had wrote or had written, thou hadst wrote or hadst written, he had wrote or had written. Plu. We had wrote or had written, ye had wrote or had written, they had wrote or had written.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tense. To have wrote or have written.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect and pluperfect tenses. Sing. I might have wrote or written, thou mightest have wrote or written, he might have wrote or written. Plu. We might have wrote or written, ye might have wrote or written, they might have wrote or written.

The other modes and tenses follow the regular form.

To see.
Present See Preter Saw Parti. Seen.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I saw or did see, thou sawest or didst see, he saw or did see. Plu. We saw or did see, ye saw or did see, they saw or did see.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have seen, thou hast seen, he hath or has seen. Plu. We have seen, ye have seen, they have seen.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect and pluperfect tenses. Sing. I might have seen, thou mightest have seen, he might have seen. Plu. We might have seen, ye might have seen, they might have seen.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tense. To have seen.

This is one of those verbs in which the perfect tenses must be expressed by the participial form: and which, I think, is always the case when that form consists but of one syllable.

To go.
Present Go. Preter Went. Parti. Form. Gone.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I went or did go, thou wentest or didst go, he went or did go. Plu. We went or did go, ye went or did go, they went or did go.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have gone, thou hast gone, he hath or has gone. Plu. We have gone, ye have gone, they have gone.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had gone, thou hadst gone, ye had gone. Plu. We had gone, ye had gone, they had gone.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I might have gone, thou mightest have gone, he might have gone. Plu. We might have gone, ye might have gone, they might have gone.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tense. To have gone.

The participial form of this verb is often joined to the neuter verb, when it refers to the mere circumstance or event of going; as, "he is just gone: he has been gone some time." The same thing may be observed of the verb, to come.

To shine.
Present Shine. Preter Shone. Parti. Form. Shined.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I shone or did shine, thou didst shine, he shone or did shine. Plu. We shone or did shine, ye shone or did shine, they shone or did shine.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have shone or have shined, thou hast shone or hast shined, he hath or has has shone or hath or has shined. Plu. We have shone or have shined, ye have shone or have shined, they have shone or have shined.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had shone or had shined, thou hadst shone or had shined, he had shone or had shined. Plu. We had shone or had shined, ye had shone or had shined, they had shone or had shined.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I might have shone or shined, thou mightest have shone or shined, he might have shone or shined. Plu. We might have shined, &c.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Perfect Tense. To have shone or to have shined.

Though this verb has, properly speaking, no passive participle, yet it has a participial form as above, which is used in the perfect tenses, and in this it agrees with other verbs of the same class.

To let.

(Signifying to permit or suffer.)

Present Let.

Preter Let.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I let, thou lettest, he letteth or lets. Plu. We let, ye let, they let.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I did let, thou didst let, he did let. Plu. We did let, ye did let, they did let.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I have let, thou hast let, he hath or has let. Plu. We have let, ye have let, they have let.

Pluperfect Tense. Sing. I had let, thou hadst let, he had let. Plu. We had let, ye had let, they had let.

Future Tense. Sing. I will let, thou wilt let, he will let. Plu. We will let, ye will let, they will let.

IMPERATIVE MODE.

Sing. Let, or do thou let. Plu. Let, or do ye let.

POTENTIAL MODE.

Present and future Tenses. Sing. I may let, thou mayest let, he may let. Plu. We may let, ye may let, they may let.

Perfect Tense. Sing. I might have let, thou mightest have let, he might have let. Plu. We might have let, ye might have let, they might have let.

INFINITIVE MODE.

Pres. To let. Pret. To have let. Fut. About to let.

This shews that let is not a sign of the imperative mode, but a real verb, occasionally used in all modes and tenses, joined to some other verb in the infinitive mode, either expressed or understood: as, "You will let me do it." "I might have let him go."

Let, signifying to let down, &c. may have a passive participle: as, "I was let down in a basket."

To dare.

(Signifying to venture.)

Present Dare.

Preter Durst.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. Sing. I dare, thou dardest, he dareth or dares. Plu. We dare, ye dare, they dare.

Imperfect Tense. Sing. I durst, thou durst, he durst. Plu. We durst, ye durst, they durst, or did dare.

Perfect and pluperfect Tenses. Sing. I durst have, thou durst have, he durst have. Plu. We durst have, ye durst have, they durst have.

Future Tense. Sing. I will dare, thou wilt dare, he will dare. Plu. We will dare, ye will dare, they will dare.

Imperatively. Dare to do it.

Interrogatively. Dare you do it?

The verb, ought, is only used in the indicative.

Present and future Tenses. Sing. I ought, thou oughtest, he ought. Plu. We ought, ye ought, they ought.

Preter Tense. Sing. I ought to have, thou oughtest to have, he ought to have. Plu. We ought to have, ye ought to have, they ought to have.

These two last defective verbs are used only as above, and always joined to another verb, expressed or understood in the infinitive mode; as, "I durst have done it." "I dare say."

"Some would even dare to die." "I ought to love you." "I ought to have gone thither."

Dare (to provoke) is regular.

Wot (to know) and quoth (to say) are very defective.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. I wot, they wot, he wotteth, wot ye?

Præter Tense. I wist, they wist, he wist, wist ye?

Quoth I, quoth he.

These two last verbs are seldom used except in droll style.

Of a PARTICIPLE.

A participle is derived of a verb, and partakes of the nature both of the verb and the adjective.

NOTE. The participle, so far as it expresses the circumstance of the noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, has the nature of an adjective: but, as implying the action of some agent, it has the nature of the verb.

The passive participle seems to have been invented more fully to express that influence or dependence which the agent and object of a verb have on each other: as, "John loves Elizabeth; or, Elizabeth is loved by John." "The king wroteth the letter; or, the letter was written by the king."

Here loved, and written, so far as they express the circumstances of the nouns to which they are joined by the neuter verb, may be considered as adjectives; but in another view, as they imply the action or force of some agent or compulsive cause, they may be considered as verbs.

Hence it is that verbs intransitive, which have no object, can have no passive participle; some of them have a participial form joined to the neuter verb: as, "The man is fallen." "The sun is risen." But as fallen and risen, have no reference to any agent or compulsive cause different from the subject of the verb, so they cannot with any propriety be denominated passive participles: and, notwithstanding their form, they differ very little, if any thing, from common adjectives.

The same thing may be observed of the active participle: as, "The master is writing, the horse is trotting." Here the participle implies both the circumstance and the action of the noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, and therefore has the property of a participle. But if we use the same word in a merely descriptive sense, as, "The writing master; the trotting horse." It loses the property of a participle and becomes a mere adjective.

There are two participles pertaining to most verbs, the active which always ends in ing, and the passive, which for the most part ends in ed: as from the verb call, are derived the participles calling, and called. In the formation of the participles, if the verb ends in e, the e is omitted: as, love, loving, loved. If it ends in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel bearing the accent, that consonant is doubled: as, commit, committing, committed.

The passive participle is, for the most part, the same with the preter, or past tense of the verb; but in both these there are many irregularities; the chief of which may be gathered from the following catalogue.

The following are intransitive verbs, and have, properly speaking, no passive participle.

Present	Preter.	Parti. Form.	Present	Preter.	Parti. Form.
Abide	abode		Leap	leaped, leapt	leaped
Arise	arose	arisen	Lie	lay
Awake	awaked, awoke	awaked	Rise	rose	risen
Cleave	cleaved, claye	cleaved	Rot	rotted	rotten
Cling	clang, clung	clung	Run	ran	run
Come	came	came	Shine	shone	shined
Creep	creeped, crept	crept	Sink	sank	sunk
Crow	crew	crowed	Shrink	shrank	shrank
Deal	dealt	dealt	Sleep	slept	slept
Dare	durst		Slide	slid	slidden
Die	died	dead	Slink	slank	slunk
Dwell	dwelt	dwelt	Speed	sped	sped
Fall	fell	fallen	Spit	spat	spitten
Feed	fed	fed	Stand	stood	stood
Flee	fled	fled	Stick	stuck	stuck
Fly	flew	flown	Stink	stank	stunk
Go	went	gone	Swing	swang	swung
Grow	grew	grown	Thrive	throve	thriven
Hang	hung	hung	Weep	wept	wept

NOTE,

"Some would even dare to die." "I ought to love you," "I ought to have gone thither."

Dare (to provoke) is regular.

Wot (to know) and quoth (to say) are very defective.

INDICATIVE MODE.

Present Tense. I wot, they wot, he wotteth, wot ye?

Præter Tense. I wist, they wist, he wist, wist ye?

Quoth I, quoth he.

These two last verbs are seldom used except in droll style.

Of a PARTICIPLE.

A participle is derived of a verb, and partakes of the nature both of the verb and the adjective.

NOTE. The participle, so far as it expresses the circumstance of the noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, has the nature of an adjective: but, as implying the action of some agent, it has the nature of the verb.

The passive participle seems to have been invented more fully to express that influence or dependence which the agent and object of a verb have on each other: as, "John loves Elizabeth; or, Elizabeth is loved by John." "The king wrote the letter; or, the letter was written by the king."

Here loved, and written, so far as they express the circumstances of the nouns to which they are joined by the neuter verb, may be considered as adjectives; but in another view, as they imply the action or force of some agent or compulsive cause, they may be considered as verbs.

Hence it is that verbs intransitive, which have no object, can have no passive participle; some of them have a participial form joined to the neuter verb: as, "The man is fallen." "The sun is risen." But as fallen and risen, have no reference to any agent or compulsive cause different from the subject of the verb, so they cannot with any propriety be denominated passive participles: and, notwithstanding their form, they differ very little, if any thing, from common adjectives.

The same thing may be observed of the active participle: as, "The master is writing, the horse is trotting." Here the participle implies both the circumstance and the action of the noun to which it is joined by the neuter verb, and therefore has the property of a participle. But if we use the same word in a merely descriptive sense, as, "The writing master; the trotting horse." It loses the property of a participle and becomes a mere adjective.

There are two participles pertaining to most verbs, the active which always ends in ing, and the passive, which for the most part ends in ed: as from the verb call, are derived the participles calling, and called. In the formation of the participles, if the verb ends in e, the e is omitted: as, love, loving, loved. If it ends in a single consonant preceded by a single vowel bearing the accent, that consonant is doubled: as, commit, committing, committed.

The passive participle is, for the most part, the same with the preter, or past tense of the verb; but in both these there are many irregularities; the chief of which may be gathered from the following catalogue.

Hang	hung	hung	Weep	wept	wept

NOTE,

NOTE. There are a few compound irregular verbs, such as befall, bespeak, &c. Which, as they follow the simple form, it was not thought necessary to insert in this catalogue.

There are a few verbs ending in t, and d, that are the same in the present, preter tenses, and passive participle: as, burst, cast, cost, cut, hit, hurt, knit, let, put, read, rent, rid, set, shed, shred, shut, slit, split, spread, thrust.

Here it may be observed, that there are two ways of expressing the perfect and pluperfect tenses in most irregular verbs: as, I have wrote, or have written, &c. I had wrote, or had written, &c.

NOTE. In these instances written is, I think, a real verb, but for distinction's sake we call it the participial form; and in all irregular verbs it was heretofore, and, in some of them, it is still the only form made use of in the preter tenses.

Of an A D V E R B.

AN adverb is a part of speech joined to a verb, an adjective, a participle, and sometimes to another adverb, to express the quality or circumstance of it: as, he reads well, a truly good man, he is secretly plotting, he writes very correctly.

Some adverbs admit of comparison: as, often, oftener, oftenest; soon, sooner, soonest; and many of them are compared by the other adverbs, much, more, most, &c.

NOTE. Adverbs have relation to time: as, now, then, lately, &c. to place, as here, there, &c. to number: as, once, twice, &c.

Of a CONJUNCTION.

A conjunction is a part of speech that joins words or sentences together: as, albeit, although, altho', and, because, but, either, else, however, if, namely, neither, nor, though, tho', therefore, thereupon, unless, whereas, whereupon, whether, yet. The foregoing are always conjunctions: but these six following are sometimes adverbs; also, as, otherwise, since, likewise, then. Except, and save, are sometimes verbs; for, sometimes a preposition; and that, sometimes a pronoun.

Of a PREPOSITION.

A preposition is a word set before nouns, or pronouns, to express the relation of persons, places, or things to each other: as, he came to, and stood before the city.

Prepositions used in this sense are such as follow. About, above, after, against, among, amongst, at, before, behind, below, beneath, between, beyond, by, for, from, in, into, of, off, on, upon, over, through, to, unto, than, towards, under, with, within, without.

Of an INTERJECTION.

AN interjection is a word that expresses any sudden motion of the mind, transported with the sensation of pleasure or pain: as, O! Ob! Alas! Lo!

DISSERTATION III.

On the Derivation and Composition of Words.

HERE we enter the grand laboratory of the English language, in which all kinds of words are transformed and compounded at pleasure; the various artists display their various talents; and though now and then we meet with a very uncouth and ill formed production, yet, for the most part, we are surprized with a new and pleasing variety in almost every department. To investigate all the modes of transmutation and composition in the process of this art, which is hardly exceeded in the Greek language itself, would be next to impossible. A few strictures, however, on the materials in general, and the manner in which they are used, may not be unacceptable.

THE SAXON MODES.

From the substantive we form the adjective in ful, as, joy, joyful; faith, faithful. In some, as, tooth, toothsome; game, gamesome. In less: as, joy, joyless; hope, hopeless. In ly and y: as, man, manly, fault, faulty. In ish: as, boy, boyish, child, childish. In like: as, war, warlike, king, kinglike. In wise: as, weather, weatherwise; road, roadwise. Another substantive in head: as, God, Godhead; maiden, maidenhead. In hood: as, man, manhood; child, childhood. In ship: as, clerk, clerkship; lord, lordship. In dom: as, king, kingdom; duke, dukedom. In rick and wick, not much used; as, bishop, bishoprick; bailiff, bailiwick.

One substantive is joined to another with or without the hyphen, and frequently in the distinct form, in which case the first substantive becomes an adjective, and distinguishes the quality of the second: as, seaman, horse-woman, market boat, fiddle stick.

Here we may observe, when the substantive is the subject, the terminations like, ly and ish, denote a quality like or suited to that subject: as, lion-like, like a lion, suited to a lion: womanly, like a woman, suited to a woman; foolish, like a fool, suited to a fool. Ful, some, and and y denote an exuberance of the quality : as, joyful, full of joy, abounding with joy ; frolisome, full of frolics, abounding in frolics ; musty, full of must, abounding with must. Less denotes the want, or entire absence of the quality : as, joyless, void of joy, destitute of joy. The termination wise denotes dexterity : as, way-wise, expert in finding the way, dextrous in choosing the path.

The terminations bead and hood denote state or condition : as, widowhood, the state or condition of a widow. Skip, rick and wick denote office, jurisdiction and dignity : as, chancellorship, the office or dignity of a chancellor : bishoprick, the temporalities of a bishop, the office of a bishop : bailwick, the jurisdiction of a bailiff.

From the adjective we form the substantive in ness : as, black, blackness ; good, goodness ; tall, tallness. Another adjective in some, and ish ; as, full, fulness ; glad, gladness : tall, tallish ; blue, bluish. The adverb in ly : as, common, commonly ; joyful, joyfully.

The adjective is frequently put absolutely and becomes a substantive : as, "The public good requires it." "The poor must be remembered."

Here the termination ness denotes state or condition : as, blackness, the state of being black ; tallness, the state of being tall. Some denotes the quality in a small degree of excess : as, blissome, more than commonly blith ; gladsome, more than commonly glad. Ish denotes the quality with some degree of diminution : as, blackish, somewhat black ; tallish, somewhat tall, tending to tallness.

From the verb we form the substantive in er : as, make, maker ; help, helper. The passive participle for the most part in ed : as love, loved ; call, called. The active participle in ing : as, love, loving ; call, calling.

Be is frequently prefixed to verbs and participles, and adds something to the intention or force of the radical : as, dabble, bedabble ; dizen, bedizen ; spattered, bespattered.

Un, signifying a negation, is prefixed to almost all verbs, adjectives and participles ; and sometimes to substantives : as, skilful, unskilful ; called, uncalled ; meaning, unmeaning ; skilfulness, unskilfulness ; preparedness, unpreparedness ; mask, unmask ; button, unbutton ; dressed, undressed.

Well is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and sometimes in the distinct, which, in many cases, seems to be the best form : as, done, well done ; affected, well affected ; taken, well-taken ; accepted, well-accepted ; accomplished, well accomplished ; prepared, well prepared.

Ill is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and frequently in the distinct form ; as, minded, ill minded ; advised, ill-advised ; chosen, ill chosen.

Half is prefixed to participles, with, or without the hyphen, and sometimes in the distinct form : as, roasted, half roasted ; dressed, half dressed ; formed, half formed ; ground, half ground.

Re, signifying repetition or return, is prefixed to substantives, verbs and participles ; as, admission, readmission ; print, reprint ; established, re-established.

All is prefixed to adjectives and participles ; as, powerful, allpowerful ; seeing, allseeing ; wise, allwise ; rarely to substantives ; as, conqueror, allconqueror.

THE LATIN MODES.

From the substantive we form the adjective in ous : as, joy, joyous ; beauty, beauteous ; grace, gracious.

In al : as, music, musical ; condition, conditional ; spire, spiral. In ive : as, sport, sportive ; success, successive ; progress, progressive. In able : as, sale, saleable : Another substantive in ist ; as, art, artist ; humour, humourist. In ian : as, music, musician ; physic, physician. In y : as, correspondence, correspondency ; innocence, innocency ; complacence, complacency.

From the adjective we form the substantive in ity ; as, prodigal, prodigality ; substantial, substantiality ; stable, stability. Another adjective in al ; as, politic, political ; paralytic, paralytical ; syllabic, syllabical.

From the verb we form the adjective in able ; as, commend, commendable ; suppose, supposable ; alter, alterable. In ible ; as, add, addible ; dissolve, dissolvable ; compress, compressible. In ive : as, express, expressive ; afflict, afflictive ; elect, elective. In ant and ent : as, comply, compliant ; attend, attendant ; dissolve, dissolvent ; differ, different. The substantive in ation : as, tempt, temptation ; exalt, exaltation. In ition ; as, add, addition ; complete, completion ; suppose, supposition. In ance, and ence, as, incumber, incumbrance ; perform, performance ; rely, reliance ; defy, defiance ; differ, difference ; concur, concurrence ; exist, existence.

ANTE, signifying priority of time, is sometimes prefixed to substantives, verbs and participles : as, chamber, antechamber ; penult, antepenult ; date, antedate ; dated, antedated.

Co, signifying with, is sometimes prefixed to substantives, adjectives, verbs and participles : as, partner, co-partner ; operation, co-operation ; eternal, co-eternal ; essential, co-essential ; extend, co-extend ; existing, co-existing.

Non, signifying negation, is prefixed to substantives and adjectives : as, importation, nonimportation ; existence, nonexistence ; conformist, nonconformist ; organical, nonorganical.

IN, IM and IR, for better sound sake, implying a negation or contrariety, are prefixed to substantives, adjectives and adverbs: as, congruity, incongruity; possibility, impossibility; regularity, irregularity; separable, inseparable; practicable, impracticable; reproachable, irreproachable; sensibly, insensibly; perceptibly, imperceptibly; reproachably, irreproachably.

PRE, or PRÆ, signifying priority or eminence, are prefixed to substantives and adjectives: as, existence, preexistence; eminent, preeminent; conceived, preconceived.

COUNTER, signifying opposition, is prefixed to substantives, verbs and participles: as, project, counterproject; balance, counterbalance; marked, countermarked.

THE GREEK MODES.

From the substantive we form the verb in ize, as, philosophy, philosophize; epitome, epitomize; harmony, harmonize; author, authorize. Another substantive in ism; as, catholic, catholicism; Arminian, Arminianism; Calvin, Calvinism; Spinoza, Spinosism.

From the verb we form the substantive in sm: as, baptize, baptism; syllogize, syllogism.

ANTI, signifying contrariety, or opposition, is prefixed to substantives and adjectives, as, courtier, anticourtier; ministerial, antiministerial; christian, antichristian; asthmatic, antiasthmatic.

THE FRENCH MODES.

From the substantive we form another substantive in age: as, pound, poundage; pack, package; person, personage; patron, patronage.

From the verb we form the substantive in ment; as, resent, resentment; conceal, concealment; content, contentment; command, commandment.

MIS, implying error or deceit, is prefixed to substantives, verbs and participles: as, application, misapplication; management, mismanagement; apply, misapply; conducted, misconducted.

DIS, implying negation or contrariety, is prefixed to substantives, verbs and participles: as, satisfaction, dissatisfaction; credit, discredit; charge, discharge: possess, dispossess; claim, disclaim; approved, disapproved.

Besides all these, there is, in the English language, another mode of combination, in which the verb is connected with the adverb, and requires a sense somewhat different from the simple form: as, to call in, to call out, to call on; to cast off, to cast out, to cast up; to pass by, to pass on, to pass over.

Though the compound and derivative words in the English language retain, for the most part, the general sense or intention of the radicals out of which they are formed, yet sometimes they convey a very different meaning. For instance, success, and succession imply very different ideas; so do expose, and exposition.

As the modes of combination are so numerous and comprehensive, it is no wonder our language should afford some instances of injudicious management in this art. Care should be taken that we do not indulge too much to the itch of novelty, or to the more pressing calls of convenience on urgent occasions. It may sometimes be much easier to coin a new word than to recollect a proper and established phraseology to express our ideas; and hence it is, perhaps, that dislikeness, circuitry, mechanist, stultify, and many others, notwithstanding the authority of great names, will hardly ever acquire an established reputation or general currency in the English language.

DISSERTATION IV.

On SYNTAX.

SYNTAX includes the order, the connection, and the agreement of words in a sentence.

If this short definition be just, the affected negligence and brevity with which the writers on English grammar have generally treated this subject, must have been owing to more than common inattention. Surely it will be allowed, by all who give themselves time to think, that much of the propriety, beauty, and perspicuity of language depends on a due observation of the rules of Syntax*.

The articles, a, and an, are used only before nouns of the singular number, and before a word that begins with a vowel; a before a word that begins with a consonant; an, or, a, before a word, that begins with b: as, “a Christian, an infidel, an heathen, or a heathen.” But if the b be not sounded, then the article, an, is only used: as, “an hour, an herb. A and an are indefinite: as, “a man, a house.” i. e. any man, any house, without distinction. But the is definite: as, “The man, the house.” i. e. some one man, some one house in particular. The is likewise used to distinguish distinguish two or more persons or things mentioned before: as, "The men." (not the women.) "The Lords." (as distinguished from the Commons.)

* The truth of this remark is sufficiently illustrated in the many awkward modes of construction adopted by a writer of the first eminence in the republic of letters.

When two nouns come together with the preposition of between them, denoting possession, the latter may be made the genitive case, and set before the other: as, "The property of the men." The men's property.

Nouns of the plural number that end in s, will not very properly admit this genitive case. "The Common's house."

The adjective is usually set before its substantive: as, "The second year, a good man." But frequently, for better sound's sake, especially in poetry, the adjective comes after its substantive: as,

"The genuine cause of every deed divine."

When thing, or things, is substantive to an adjective, the word thing, or things, is elegantly omitted, and the adjective is put absolutely, or without its substantive: as, "Who will shew us any good?" for, who will shew us any good thing? In many other cases, the adjective is put absolutely, especially when the noun has been mentioned before, and is easily understood, though not expressed.

In forming the degrees of comparison, the adverbs, more, most, less, least, &c. are only used before the adjective when the terminations er and est are omitted: as, "more full, less beautiful." For better sound's sake most adjectives ending in ive, at, ful, able, ing, ous, ish, cut, some, ible, and some others, must be compared by the adverbs, more, most, least, &c. as, penfive, more penfive; substantial, more substantial. Adjectives of more than one syllable generally come under this rule.

The pronouns must always agree with the nouns for which they stand, or to which they refer in number, person, and gender: as, "The sun shines and his race is appointed to him: the moon appears, and she shines with light, but not her own: the sea swells, it roars, and what can repel its force?"

The neuter pronoun, by an idiom peculiar to the English language, is frequently joined in explanatory sentences, with a noun or pronoun of the masculine or feminine gender: as, "It is I. It was the man that did it." Though this seems to be an indefinite use of the neuter pronoun as expressive of some cause or subject of enquiry without any respect to person or gender, yet, in strict propriety, it cannot be so used with a noun of the plural number: for instance, "It was they that did it."

Where two or more nouns or pronouns of the singular number are joined together in a sentence, the pronoun which refers to them must be in the plural number: as, "The king and the queen had put on their robes."

When two or more nouns or pronouns of different persons, are joined in a sentence, the pronoun which refers to them must agree with the first person in preference to the second, and with the second in preference to the third: as, "Thou and thy father are both in the same fault, and ye ought to confess it. The captain and I fought on the same ground, we divided the spoil and shared it between us."

The genitive case of a pronoun is always used when joined to a noun to denote property or possession: as, "My head and thy hand." The head of me and the hand of thee are inelegant expressions.

The genitive cases of the pronouns, viz. my, thy, &c. are used when joined with nouns; but mine, thine, &c. when put absolutely or without their nouns: as, "It is my book," or, omitting the noun, "It is mine." The same thing may be observed of other and others, in the plural number: as, "The property of other men;" or, without the noun, "The property of others."

The pronominal adjectives are only used in the genitive case when put absolutely: as, "*I will not do it for tens sake.*"

Mine, and thine, are frequently put for my and thy, before a word that begins with a vowel: as, "Mine eye for my eye."

When two persons, or things, are spoken of in a sentence, and there is occasion to mention them over again, for the sake of distinction, that is used when it refers to the former, and this when it refers to the latter: as,

"Self love, the spring of motion, acts the soul;

"Reason's comparing balance rules the whole:

"Man but for that no action could attend,

"And but for this were active to no end."

The relative, who, or whom, is used when it refers to persons; which, when it refers to things: as, "I am bound to respect a man, who has done me a favour; though he be chargeable with vices, which I hate."

That refers both to persons and things: as, "The man that I respect; the thing that I want, is not here."

Who, what, and which, are used in asking questions: who, when we enquire for a man's name: as, "Who is that man?" what, when we would know his occupation, &c. as, "What is that man?" which, when we want to distinguish one of two or more persons or things: as, "Which of the men; which of the roads will you chuse?"

The verb agrees with its noun, or pronoun, i. e. with its agent, or subject, in number and person: as, "The boy writes, I love, he who reads."

NOTE. This agent, or subject, is always found by asking the question who, or what, on the verb; as, who write? The answer to the question is, boys, which word is the agent of the verb, write.

In the complaisant style, it is common to use you, instead of thou, when we speak to one person only; and, in that case, it has a plural verb joined with it: as, "You are my brother."

A noun of multitude, of the singular number, may have a verb, either singular, or plural: as, "The people is mad," or, "The people are mad." The latter seems to be more elegant.

When two nouns, or pronouns, are connected together in a sentence, as joint agents, or subjects, they must have a plural verb, though they should be both of the singular number: as, "The man and his wife are happy."

When the neuter verb stands between two nouns, or pronouns, one of the singular, and the other of the plural number, it may best agree with that which immediately goes before it: as, "All things were sea; the whole sum is twenty-four pounds."

Sometimes a sentence, or an infinitive, is the subject of a verb, in which case, the verb must be put in the singular number, and third person: as, "To see the sun is pleasant."

The pronouns, I, we, thou, ye, he, she, they, and who, being the nominative case, are always used when they stand as the agent of an active, or the subject of the neuter verb: as, "I see, he loves, we are, they are."

The agent, or subject, is most commonly set immediately before the verb, or the sign of the verb: as, "The man lives: the city has stood a thousand years:" but in the imperative mode it is set after the verb: as, "Love thou; be thou happy:" in like manner, when a question is asked, it is set after the verb, or between the sign and the verb: as, "Are you there? doth the king live?"

The accusative case of a pronoun is always used when it receives the force or impression of the active verb, or the active participle: as, "He calls me, she is beating them."

When the agent and object of a verb are not distinguished (as in nouns) by different cases, the agent is always set before, and the object after the verb, this being the natural order and necessary to determine the sense: as, "Alexander conquered Darius." If Darius had been the conqueror, it is plain the order of the nouns must have been inverted.

The accusative case of a pronoun is always set after prepositions: as, "To me, for them, &c."

After verbs of showing, giving, &c. the preposition, to, is elegantly omitted before the pronoun, which notwithstanding must be in the accusative: as, "I give him the book; for, I give to him the book."

The Interjections, O, oh, and ah, require the accusative case of a pronoun in the first person: as, "O me, oh me, ah me." But the nominative in the second: as, "O thou, O ye."

Tan is only used in comparison, and takes the same case after that goes before it: as, "He is greater than I; she loves him better than me."

The noun, or pronoun, which receives the force of the active verb, is most commonly set after the verb: as, "I love the man." But the relative, whom, is always set before the verb: as, "The man whom I love, is absent."

The auxiliary signs, do, and did, and their inflections, doth, doth, or does, and didst, ought to be used only for the sake of emphasis: as, "I do love; he doth love."

Shall is used in the first person barely to express the future action or event: as, "I shall do it:" but, in the second and third it promises, or commands: as, "You shall do it." On the contrary, will, in the second and third persons, barely expresses the future action or event: as, "You will do it:" but, in the first, it promises, or threatens: as, "I will do it."

The terminations, eth, ed, and the participial form of the verb are used in the grave and formal; but s, 'd, and the form of the past tense, in the free and familiar style: as, (gravely) "He hath loved. The man hath spoken and still speaketh." (familiarily) "He has loved. The man has spoke and still speaks."

The passive participle, and not the past tense, should be always used when joined in a sentence with the neuter verb: as, "It was written (not it was wrote) in Hebrew."

That form of the tenses in verbs, which is distinguished by the active participle, is used with strict propriety, when we would express the continuance of an action: as, "I have been writing a long time. I shall be writing all the week."

The adverb is always placed immediately before the adjective; but most frequently after the verb: as, "A very pious man prays frequently."

The conjunctions if, though, except, &c. implying a manifest doubt or uncertainty, require the subjunctive form of the verb: as, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him. I will not let thee go except thou bless me. Kiss the Son lest he be angry. If he but speak the word. See thou do it not."

NOTE.

NOTE. This form seems to be elliptical, and may be thus resolved. "Though he should slay me. Left he should be angry. See thou must do it not."

The preposition, to, is always used before nouns of place, after verbs and participles of motion: as, "I went to London; I am going to town, &c." But the preposition, at, is always used when it follows the neuter verb in the same case: as, "I have been at London. I am at the place appointed." We likewise say, "He touched at any place; he arrived at; he lives at," &c.

The proposition, in, is set before countries, cities, and large towns, especially if they are in the same nation: as, "He lives in London, in France, &c." At is set before villages, single houses, and cities, if they are in distant countries: as, "He lives at Hackney," &c.

No precise rules can be given for the order or placing of all words in a sentence. The euphony and perspicuity of the expression are the two things which ought to be chiefly regarded.

The Construction of the PREPOSITIONS with the other Parts of Speech.

Words denoting property or possession, and such as signify the part of a whole, are constructed with of: as, "Possessed of wealth. "Seized of a large estate." "Disseized of their ancient patrimony." "The light of the eyes." "The shape of the body." "The prerogative of the king." "The privilege of the subject." "One of the men." "Some of the company." "A member of the house." "The foot of the hill." "The extent of the plain."

Words which denote any affection of the mind are constructed with of, to, unto and for before the object of that affection: as, "A real love to mankind." "An inveterate hatred to the fair sex." "A sincere affection for his aunt." "The love of man." "The love of God." But when the subject and object of the affection happen to be reciprocal, or may take place of each other, of is not so proper, at least not so determinate, as to and for. The love of God may intend either the love which God has for us, or the love we have to him, and is therefore in itself an ambiguous expression. But, when this reciprocation cannot take place, it is a matter of indifference, as to the sense, whether we use of, to, or for: as, "The love of the world." "The love of money." "A love of virtue." "A love to virtue."

Words denoting inclination or desire, and the contrary, are constructed with after, for, of, to, unto, and towards: as, "He had a great desire after it." "She was disposed for a husband." "Covetous of gain." "Desirous of vain glory." "Disinclined to marriage." "Indisposed to compliance." "Disaffected to the king." "Averse to all innovations." "An aversion to subjection." "Disaffection towards the whigs." "Inclined towards London."

Words denoting approbation or disapprobation are constructed with of: as, "She disapproved of the measure." "They could not approve of it."

Words signifying opposition or contrariety are constructed with to or unto: as, "Opposite to virtue." "Contrary to common sense."

Words denoting complacency or displacency are constructed with at and with: as, "The king was displeased at it." "She was greatly entertained with his conversation."

Words denoting intercourse, agreement, or compliance, and the contrary, are constructed with with and between: as, "He made a covenant with the people." "An agreement between them." "She held society with mortals." "I will comply with your request."

Words denoting comparison, likeness, or unlikeness, are constructed with to and with: as, "What is vice when compared with virtue." "Like unto me." "Similar to this." "I will liken him to a wise man."

Words denoting gift or distribution are constructed with to or from: as, "A distribution to many." "I give to you." "It was given from one to another."

Words which denote receiving are constructed with of or from: as, "I received it of him." "She took it from them."

Words which signify submission or obedience are constructed with to: as, "A submission to ordinances." "A subjection to the laws." "To submit to order." "Obedience to parents." "He submitted to the conqueror."

Words signifying trust or dependence are constructed with in, to, on and upon, before the object: as, "I will trust to you." "I place confidence in that man." "He trusted in God." "I depend on your word." "She relied on that promise."

Words denoting a declaration, exhibition, or recommendation are constructed with to, before the person to whom the declaration is made: as, "She declared it to me." "It was represented to the king." "He shewed him to the people." "He was much recommended to his lordship."

Words denoting plenty or want are constructed with of, in and with: as, "Full of wine." "Void of truth." "Empty of air." "Destitute of honour." "Deprived of all." "Plenteous in mercy." "Rich in goods." "Abounding with corn."

Words denoting fitness or unfitness, advantage or disadvantage, are constructed with to or for: as, "Fitted to the person." "Fit for children." "Advantageous to commerce." "Favourable to population." "Profitable to all." "Unprofitable to many." "Better for you." "Worse for them."

Words signifying accusation or acquittal are constructed with of before the crime: as, "She was accused of incontinency." "He was acquitted of perjury."

Words which imply blame or censure, praise or dispraise, are constructed with for: as, "She was indicted for perjury." "Admired for beauty." "Caresse*d for* her singing." "Censured for lying." "Praised for her constancy."

Participles or words shewing any thing made, done, or to be done, are constructed with by or with, respecting the agent or instrument: as, "The writing was signed by the king." "It was written with the point of a diamond." With of or from, respecting the material: as, "It was made of wood." "It was formed from the stump of a tree." With in or at, respecting the place: as, "It was made at Worcester." It was done in London." With to or for, respecting the intention: as, "It was made for sale." "It was formed to the hand."

Words of motion and rest are constructed in different circumstances with almost all the prepositions in the English language. About and round denote a circular or a kind of uncertain motion or position: as, "They went round the church." "He goes about the country." "They went round the town." "They stood about the door." "He lives somewhere about Uxbridge." Above and over denote a more elevated direction or station: as, "The shot went above the mark." "The arrow flew over their heads." "They dwelt above the bridge." "He lodged over the gate." After denotes a pursuit or posteriour motion: as, "This body march after the second battalion." "They all ran after the thief." Against denotes a hostile motion, or a position in contact with some other body: as, "He marched against the city with a vast army." "He stood against the wall." Among, amongst, and with denote a motion or position in company or surrounded by others: as, "They went among the rest." "He dwelt among the Sidonians." "They go with the multitude." "It will abide with you." At denotes the place of rest, and a violent or hostile motion: as, "He stood at the door." "She flew at him." Before denotes an appearance in presence of a superior, and a precedency of motion or situation: as, "He stood before the king." "She went before a magistrate." "She stood before all the company." Below, beneath and under denote an inferior direction or position: as, "They went below the town." "They passed under the gate." "They stood beneath the mountain." Between denotes a middle direction or station: as, "They passed between the ranks." "He stood between them." Beyond denotes a station at some further distance: as, "The arrow flew beyond the mark." "He dwelt beyond the town." By and in denote nearness of situation and the means or instrument of conveyance: as, "He went by the house." "She stood by the pillar." "It went by the post." "She came in the coach." For denotes the design: as, "They went for pleasure." "They run for a wager." From denotes the place or point from which motion commences: as, "They came from London." "They went from Worcester." Into denotes entrance: as, "He came into the house." "He entered easily into the subject." Though denotes perseverance, or motion continued from one extreme to the other: as, "He passed through the town." "She ran through all the particulars of the story." To and unto denote the place or point to which the motion is directed: as, "He came to London." "He rode from London to York."

Some late writers seem to have made it a rule to subjoin to compound words from the Latin, the prepositions with which they are compounded, or those which answer to them in the English. But this rule cannot be reduced to general practice; and some instances in which it has been applied seem to be inconsistent with the idiom of the English language. "Averse from Venus." "Averse from God." "Was totally dependent of." "Conformable with." "Informed in some parts of their character."

These few strictures, on this very difficult part of Grammar, cannot be supposed adequate to the various cases that may arise, or to the instruction which the subject requires. They are rather intended as hints to remind us of our danger, and to make us more cautious in the use of those words which have been so often misapplied by some of our best writers.

DISSERTATION V.

On the ELLIPSIS.

ELLIPSIS, as applied to grammar, is the omission of a word or part of a sentence, which must be supplied or understood to complete the sense, or make out the construction. The chief design of Ellipsis is to avoid disagreeable repetitions, as well as to express our ideas in as few words and in as pleasing a manner as possible. To the proper use of this figure we owe much of the clearness and perspicuity of the English language. The style of the law is the least elliptical, but at the same time the most obscure and perplexed of any in present use. The frequent tautologies and the immoderate length of the periods require a closeness of attention and facility of connection unknown to common readers: and hence it is that the design of a deed or instrument, which may take up half an hour in rehearsal, is generally better understood in two or three short and expressive sentences*.

But though the English language owes much of its perspicuity to the proper use of the Ellipsis, yet an improper or immoderate use of it, may induce a manifest obscurity. Extremes therefore in this, as well as in every thing else, should be carefully avoided.

Almost all compound sentences are more or less elliptical; and any kind of word in the English language, unless we except the interjection, may be elegantly suppressed by the proper application of this figure.

The ELLIPSIS of the ARTICLE.

"A man, woman, and child." i. e. A man, a woman, and a child. "A father and son. The sun and moon. The day and hour."

In all which instances the article being once mentioned, the repetition of it, unless some peculiar emphasis requires it, would be unnecessary.

"Not only the year, but the day, and the hour." In this case the Ellipsis of the last article would be rather improper.

The ELLIPSIS of the NOUN.

"A learned, wife, and good man." i. e. A learned man, a wife man, and a good man. "A prudent and faithful wife. The laws of God and man. The safety and happiness of the state." In some very emphatical expressions the Ellipsis should not be admitted; as, "Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God." "At Saint Jameses. By Saint Pauls." Here we have a noun in the genitive case and no word in the sentence to govern it; the Ellipsis must therefore be supplied to make out the construction: and yet in common conversation at least, it is much better to say, "I went by Saint Pauls:" than, "I went by Saint Paul's Church."

The ELLIPSIS of the ADJECTIVE.

"A delightful orchard and garden." i. e. A delightful orchard and a delightful garden. "A little man and woman. Great wealth and power." In such elliptical expressions, the adjective ought to have exactly the same signification, and to be quite as proper, when joined to the latter, as to the former substantives; otherwise the Ellipsis should not be admitted.

Nor should we, I think, apply this Ellipsis of the adjective to nouns of different numbers. "A magnificent house and gardens." Better use another word, "A magnificent house and fine gardens." "A tall man and a woman." In this sentence there is no Ellipsis: the adjective or quality respects only the man.

The ELLIPSIS of the PRONOUN.

"I love and fear him. i. e." I love him, and I fear him. "My house and lands. Thy learning and wisdom. His wife and daughter. Her lord and master." In all these instances the Ellipsis may be introduced with propriety: but if we would be more express and emphatical, it must not be admitted. "My Lord and my God. My sons and my daughters." "This is the man they hate. These are the goods they bought. Are these the gods they worship? Is this the woman you saw?" In such common forms of speech the relative pronoun is usually omitted: though for the most part, especially in complex sentences, it is much better to have it expressed.

"In the posture I lay." "In the way I went." "The horse I rode fell down." Better say, The posture in which I lay. The horse on which I rode fell down.

The antecedent and the relative connect the parts of a sentence together, and should, to prevent confusion and obscurity, answer to each other with great exactness. "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." The Ellipsis in such instances, is manifestly improper: let it therefore be supplied. "We speak that which we do know, and testify that which we have seen."

The relative, what, in the neuter gender, seems to include both the antecedent and the relative. "This is what you speak of. i. e. The thing which you speak of."

The ELLIPSIS of the VERB.

"The man was old and crafty." i. e. The man was old, and the man was crafty. "She was young and rich and beautiful. Thou art poor and wretched, and miserable, and blind and naked." But if we would, in such enumerations, point out one property above the rest, let that property be put last, and the Ellipsis supplied. "She is young and beautiful, and she is rich." "I recommended the father and son. We saw the town and country. He rewarded the women and

* This can be no reflection on the gentlemen of the law, as it is well known that many of them possess the powers of elocution in an eminent degree; and that one, who now fills a distinguished station in that department, has favoured us with the spirit of the laws in a style as pure and classical, as his comments upon them are just and decisive.

and children." "You ought to love and serve him. I desire to hear and learn. He went to see and hear." i. e. He went to see, and he went to hear. In which last instances, there is not only an Ellipsis of the governing verb, but likewise of the sign of the infinitive mode which is governed by it.

And here it may not be amiss to observe, that some verbs, through custom at least, seem to require the Ellipsis of this sign. "I bid you rise and go. He made me go and do it. I heard him curse and swear. I saw her go that way. You need not speak. Would you have me call?" In all which instances the sign of the infinitive mode would be improper.

The ELLIPSIS of the Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction, and Interjection.

"He spake and acted wisely. They sing and play most delightfully. She soon found and acknowledged her mistake. Thrice I went and offered my service." That is, Thrice I went, and thrice I offered my service.

"They confess the power, wisdom, goodness, and love of their Creator." i. e. The power, and wisdom, and goodness, and love. "May I speak of power, wisdom, goodness, truth." The entire Ellipsis of the conjunction, as in the last instance, occurs but seldom: in some particular cases, however, it may have its propriety.

"Though I love I do not adore him. Though he went up he could see nothing. i. e. Though I love him, yet I do not adore him. "I desire you would come to me. He said he would do it." i. e. He said that he would do it. These conjunctions may be sometimes omitted: but for the most part, it is much better to express them.

There are several pairs of correspondent conjunctions, or such as answer to each other in the construction of a sentence, which should be carefully observed, and perhaps never suppressed. That, answering to so. "It is so obvious that I need not mention it." As answering to so. "The city of Bristol is not near so large as that of London." So answering to as. "As is the priest so are the people." As answering to as. "She is as tall as you." Nor answering to neither. "Neither the one, nor the other." Or answering to either. "Either this man or that man." Or answering to whether. "Whether it were I or you." Yet answering to though or although. "Though she was young yet she was not handsome."

PREPOSITIONS are often suppressed.

"He went into the churches, halls, and public buildings: through the streets and lanes of the city: he spake to every gentleman and lady of the place." i. e. To every gentleman and to every lady. "I did him a kindness." "He brought me the news." "She gave him the letters." i. e. She gave to him the letters.

The ellipsis of the interjection is not very common.

"O pity, and shame." Milton.

EXAMPLES of the ELLIPSIS.

"If good manners will not justify my long silence, policy at least will: and you must confess, there is some prudence in not owning a debt one is incapable of paying." If good manners will not justify my long silence, policy at least will, justify it: and you must confess, that, there is some prudence in not owning a debt, which, one is incapable of paying.

Fitzosborn's Letters.

"He will often argue, that if this part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain from one nation; and if another from another." He will often argue, that if this part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain from one nation; and if another, part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain, from another nation.

Addison's Spect.

"Could the painter have made a picture of me, capable of your conversation, I should have sat to him with more delight than ever I did to any thing in my life." Could the painter have made a picture of me, which could have been, capable of your conversation, I should have sat to him with more delight than ever I did sit, to any thing in my life.

Mr. Locke to Mr. Molyneux.

A few instances in which perhaps all possible elliptical words are supplied.

"You must renounce the conversation of your friends, and every civil duty of life to be concealed in gloomy and unprofitable solitude." You must renounce the conversation of your friends, and, you must renounce, every civil duty of life, to be concealed in gloomy, solitude, and you must renounce the conversation of your friends, and you must renounce every civil duty of life, to be concealed in, unprofitable solitude.

Fitzosborn's Letters.

"When a man is thoroughly persuaded that he ought neither to admire, wish for, or pursue any thing but what is actually his duty, it is not in the power of seasons, persons, or accidents to diminish his value." When a man is thoroughly persuaded that he ought neither to admire, any thing but what is actually his duty to admire, and when a man is thoroughly persuaded that he ought neither to wish for any thing but what is actually his duty to wish for, or, when a man is thoroughly persuaded that he ought not to pursue any thing but what is actually his duty, duty, to pursue; it is not in the power of seasons, to diminish his value, and it is not in the power of persons, to diminish his value, or, it is not in the power of accidents to diminish his value.

Addison's Spect.

NOTE. Or, which occurs twice in the elliptical sentence above, is rather an impropriety; it should have been nor.

The following instances are produced to shew the impropriety of Ellipsis, in some particular cases.

"That learned gentleman, if he had read my essay quite through, would have found several of his objections might have been spared." It should have been—Would have found, that, several of his objections, &c. "I scarce know any part of natural philosophy would yield more variety and use."—Any part of natural philosophy which would yield more variety and use. "You and I cannot be of two opinions, nor, I think, any two men used to think with freedom."—Nor, I think, any two men, who are, used to think with freedom.

Mr. Locke to Mr. Molyneux.

Some sentences which seem to differ from the common forms of construction accounted for on the supposition of Ellipsis.

"By preaching repentance. By the preaching of repentance." Both these are supposed to be proper and synonymous expressions, and I cannot but think the former is an Ellipsis of the latter, in which the article and the preposition are both suppressed by custom. By preaching of repentance: and, By the preaching repentance: are both judged to be improper. These sentences are partly elliptical, and partly not so, and from hence the impropriety seems to arise. Preaching, in either form, is a substantive, distinguished by the sense, and a preposition prefixed to it: nor is the noun following governed by the supposed verbal force of the word, preaching, but by the preposition expressed or understood.

"Well is him. Wo is me. Wo unto you." These sentences are all elliptical, and partly explain each other. Well is it for him. Wo is to me. Wo is unto you. To have recourse to a supposed dative case is therefore quite unnecessary.

"My Father is greater than I. She loves him better than me." My Father is greater than I am. She loves him better than, she loves me. "To let blood. To let down." To let, out, blood; or, to let blood, run out. To let, it fall or slide, down. "To go a fishing. To go a hunting." To go a fishing voyage. To go on a hunting party. "To walk a mile. To sleep all night. To walk through the space of a mile. To sleep through all the night." "A hundred sheep. A thousand men." A flock of one hundred sheep. A company of one thousand men. "That man has a hundred a year." That man has an income of a hundred pounds in a year. "A few men. A great many men." A hundred, a thousand, few, many, are to be considered as collective nouns, and distinguished as such, by the singular article. A few (i. e. a small number) of men. A great many (i. e. a great number) of men. "He is the better for you. The deeper the well, the clearer the water." An article seems, for the most part, to be the sign of a noun either expressed or understood; and the above sentences may be resolved thus. He is the better man for you. The deeper well, the well is; the clearer water, the water is.

"He descending, the doors being shut." This is commonly called the case or state absolute, and, in English, the pronoun must be in the nominative. The sentence seems to be elliptical, and the meaning is, While he was descending, while the doors were shut. "He came into this world of ours." "I am justified in publishing any letters of Mr. Locke's." In the first of these instances the genitive case of the pronoun comes after the preposition, but cannot be governed by it, for then it would be the accusative: it must therefore be governed by some other word understood in the sentence. He came into this world of our dwelling, habitation, &c. And then omitting the noun it will be, This world of ours, by the common rules of construction. The other sentence may be explained after the same manner. I am justified in publishing any letters of Mr. Locke's writing, correspondence, &c. i. e. of the writing or correspondence of Mr. Locke.

The use of the genitive case in such instances seems to be a little uncouth. And here I cannot but observe that though, on some occasions, the genitive has its propriety and elegance, yet it should in the general be used with caution, and much more sparingly, perhaps than some authors have done.

DISSERTATION VI.

On Accent, Emphasis, and Quantity.

THE accent and quantity of syllables give that distinction to words, and that pleasing modulation to the voice in pronunciation without which the ear would be perpetually disgusted with the most insufferable monotony. And hence it is, that in all polished languages, this article has been attended to with great exactness. The Latins and Greeks distinguished all all their syllables into long and short, and the latter made use of no less than three distinct marks or characters to point out the different quantity of accent or elevation of the voice in the pronunciation. And I am inclined to think, that if the proper modes of speaking were to be carefully attended to we should find something similar to this in the English language. The Latins and especially the Greeks might perhaps carry this matter too far, and were we to follow them too closely we should be in danger of losing the openness and energy of pronunciation in a kind of sing song or unmanly recitative.

Some of our latest and perhaps best authors have been greatly divided in their opinions on this subject. One is a strenuous advocate for the unity, others no less warmly contend for the duplicity and even triplicity of accent on the same word. But perhaps a little precision may go far to reconcile, at least to accommodate the matter between the contending parties.

If by the syllabical accent we are to understand the superior stress of the voice on any one syllable of a word, as all seem to allow, the unity is fairly determined; for who will contend for two superiors?

This being granted, every word of one syllable may be properly called an atonic in the English language: it has no room for superiority, and therefore can have no syllabical accent. It may have an emphasis in common with other words, but emphasis and accent are two different things and must not be confounded in pronunciation.

For the same reason a word of two syllables can admit but of one accent, for if both the syllables be pronounced with precisely the same stress of voice, the word, in that case, has no accent at all, nor can it be distinguished in pronunciation from two words or two distinct monosyllables. How far this mode of pronunciation may be proper in some particular cases I will not pretend to determine. The instances that have been adduced, earthquake, quicksand, sackcloth, and bailstone, may perhaps come the nearest to it; but I am inclined to think that even here the first syllable will claim at least some little superiority. In words therefore of two syllables, where both are peculiarly significant, one may properly bear the syllabical accent, and the other be pronounced with greater distinction than common; and, if this observation will hold good in these particular instances, it will certainly do so in all others that can be produced.

Nor does it follow that the syllabical accent is always to be placed on the most significant syllable: the genius and custom, the particular formation and the euphony of language are certainly more prevalent than the mere significancy of a radical syllable: nor is the inconveniency of this mode of placing the accent on an insignificant syllable so great as may have been imagined, provided the more significant syllables be pronounced with proper distinctness, as they generally are by all good speakers. What inconveniency can arise from the pronunciation of the following words, substance, substantial, consubstantial and consubstantiality, as usually and respectively accented on the first, second, third, and fifth syllable? The first has nothing but the custom, and the last perhaps nothing but the euphony of language to support it. Let the syllabical accent keep its place, and let the significant syllables more or fewer be pronounced with proper distinctness, and I think we have all that is in fact contended for by the writers on this subject, and all they can reasonably desire.

In the first word custom has placed the accent on the first syllable; in the second word, which may be considered as a kind of derivative, it is transferred to the second syllable: but as the first syllable had the preference in the radical, some distinction is to be shewn to it in the derivative, and therefore it must be pronounced accordingly; in the third instance the original word is further compounded, and though the accent is retained on the same which is now become the third syllable, yet as the additional syllable is peculiarly significant, it is here likewise entitled to some distinction, and both the con and the sub are to be fully pronounced. In the last instance, the word is further transformed, and for the sake of euphony the fifth syllable now bears the accent, but for the reason before assigned, the three first syllables are all peculiarly important, and therefore ought to be distinctly heard in the pronunciation.

This illustration will hold good in a great variety of other instances, and I need only add that verbs of two syllables are generally accented on the last, especially such as are derived from the French and Latin. The active and passive participles, the tenses and persons, and adjectives in ive all retain the accent of the verbs from which they are derived. Polysyllables for the most part, especially those that are derived from the learned languages, have their accent on the antepenultima or third syllable from the last. As to the rest it seems to be consistent with the genius and custom of the English language to make the syllabical accent either to coincide with, or at least to place it as near to the first syllable as possible.

Emphasis, or what some call the oratorical accent, is a particular stress or modulation of the voice on some particular word or part of a sentence, and may be expressed in a more loud, in a more low, in a more smart and poignant, or in a more serious and solemn tone of voice than the rest of the sentence, according to the different sense of the passage, or the different effect which the speaker would have to be produced by it; and is just the same thing applied to words, as the accent before described applied to syllables.

This

This emphasis or modulation of the voice is so totally different from the syllabical accent, that it cannot be found in any instance strictly to coincide with it; it frequently occurs, and sometimes with great advantage, in numerous composition, where an accented syllable would destroy all the harmony of the verse. The place where the emphasis should be laid is sometimes exceedingly obvious, but to point out the best method of laying on this emphasis, is a task to which I profess myself to be exceedingly inadequate.

“If it had been an enemy or a stranger, I could have born it; but it was my neighbour, my friend.” “Do you call upon me, or upon him to answer that question?” “Upon you, Sir.” “Darius was conquered by Alexander.” “Was Darius conquered by Alexander? He was. Was Darius conquered by Alexander? Yes, Darius. Was Darius conquered by Alexander? Absolutely conquered. Was Darius conquered by Alexander? Yes, by Alexander.”

The quantity of a syllable is the time which is taken up in the pronunciation, without any respect to accent or emphasis, which may fall indifferently on a long or short syllable.

Syllables are long when the vowel or vowels which constitute them are not immediately joined in pronunciation with the following consonant: as, āll, bāll, bōok, beāuty.

All monosyllables and all accented syllables in e final are long: as, replāte, conspīre, sublime, compōse, revīle, tōne, tūne, tīme. Monosyllables ending in a vowel are generally: long as, me, my, she, thee.

All accented syllables ending in a vowel are long: as, comply, repartee: the interjection O, the pronoun I, and the emphatical the, are always long.

A and O before ll, lt and ld are always long: as, tall, ball, bald, balt, toll, told, colt. I before gb is long: as, figh, fight.

Syllables are short when the vowel or vowels which constitute them are immediately joined in pronunciation with the following consonant: as, in, pin, fin, an, add, heavy, heavier.

The syllable which immediately follows the accent is short: as, respīte, satyr, publican, conditional.

The articles a and the, when not emphatical, are short: as, “I saw a woman,” “I went by the man.”

EA before v and d is frequently short: as, heavy, ready, steady.

DISSERTATION VII.

On numerous Composition.

FROM what has been said of accent, emphasis and quantity, we may deduce the principles of numerous composition. And here we need not run into all the nice distinctions of the Latin and Greek poetry. Three kinds of feet at most may, I think, be sufficient, I call them the Iambic, the Anapaest, and the Trochaic.

The Iambic consists of two syllables with an accent on the last: as, appeār, resīst, comply, amēnd. The Anapaest consists of three syllables with an accent on the last: as, alamōde, aprehēnd, recommēnd, repartēe. The Trochaic consists of two syllables with the accent on the first: as, hap’py, bet’ter, com’mōn, pli’ant, am’ple. These three feet with an odd syllable at the beginning or end of a line will be found sufficient for all the measures of English verse.

The Iambic measure is by far the more sounding and majestic, whether it consists of four, six, eight, ten or twelve syllables, and is therefore best suited to the more important and serious subjects.

As new awaked from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flowery herb, I found me laid
In balmy sweat, which with his beams the sun
Soon dried, and on the reeking moisture fed.
Strait towards heaven my wondering eyes I turned,

And gazed awhile the ample sky:—
But, who I was, or where, or from what cause,
Knew not: to speak I tried, and forthwith spoke:

My tongue obeyed and readily could name
Whate’er I saw. Thou Sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlightened earth, so fresh and gay!
Ye hills and dales, ye rivers, woods and plains!
And ye that live and move, fair creatures, tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here.

Milton.

Hear, all ye Trojan, all ye Grecian bands!
What Paris, author of the war, demands.
Your shining swords within the sheath restrain,
And pitch your lances in the yielding plain.
Here in the midst, in either army’s fight,
He dares the Spartan king to single fight;
And wills that Helen and the ravished spoil,
That caused the contest, shall reward the toil.
Let these the brave triumphant victor grace,
And different nations part in leagues of peace.

Pope’s Homer.

Should fate command me to the farthest verge
Of the green earth, to distant barbarous climes,
Rivers unknown to song; where first the sun
Gilds Indian mountains, or his setting beams
Glance on th’ Atlantic isles; ’tis nought to me:
Since God is ever present, ever felt,

In

In the void waste, as in the city full :

And where he vital spreads, there must be joy.

Thomson.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue etherial sky,
And spangled heavens, a shining frame,
Their great original proclaim.

Addison.

Keep silence, all created things,
And wait your Maker's nod ;
My soul stands trembling while she sings
The honours of her God.

Chained to his throne, a volume lies,
With all the fates of men,
With every angel's form and size,
Drawn by th' eternal pen.

His Providence unfolds the book,
And makes his counsels shine ;
Each opening leaf, and every stroke,
Fulfil some great design.

Here, he exalts neglected worms
To sceptres and a crown ;

The Iambic, as to sound, has all the majesty and perfection of numerous composition, and is therefore justly proposed as the standard of poetic harmony. To constitute the pure Iambic the even syllables must all have a peculiar distinction ; they must be accented, or they must be monosyllables, or, if neither, they must at least be distinctly heard in the pronunciation.

What next I bring, shall please thee, be assured,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish exactly to thy heart's desire.

Milton.

Thou most indulgent, most tremendous power,
Still more tremendous for thy wondrous love.

Young.

And there, the following page he turns,
And treads the monarch down.

Watts.

O the rich depths of love divine !
Of bliss a boundless store !
Dear Saviour, let me call thee mine ;
I cannot wish for more !

On thee alone my hope relies,
Beneath thy cross I fall ;
My Lord, my life, my sacrifice,
My Jesus, and my All,

Theodosia.

But now Don Phœbus joins the middle sky,
And liberty unbars her prison door ;
And like a rushing torrent out they fly,
And now the grassy cirque has covered o'er,
With boisterous revel rout and wild uproar ;
A thousand ways in wanton rings they run ;
Heaven shield their short lived pastimes, I implore !

For well may freedom, erst so dearly won,
Appear to British elf more glad some than the fun.

Shenston in imitation of Spenser.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal* mildness, come.

Thomson.

In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious* voice ;
For ever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is divine.

Addison.

The lines cited above are all made up of pure Iambics, and are therefore, as to measure, the most perfectly harmonious.

For the sake of variety, in the Iambic measure, a Trochee is frequently admitted in the beginning of the line.

Welcome, ye shades, ye bowery thickets, hail.
Happy the heart where graces reign.

Thomson.
Watts.

This foot is very little interruption to the harmony, and when well chosen may be considered perhaps, rather as a beauty than a defect.

In the heroic measure an accented syllable is sometimes introduced in the fifth place.

Eve, rightly call'd mother of all mankind.

Milton.

This is a greater interruption to the harmony, and may well be considered as a defect. If the accent falls on any other odd syllable the harmony for the most part is entirely destroyed, and the line degenerates into something worse than mere prose. The much admired distich of Denham may seem to be an exception to this, as it affords an instance of an accented syllable in the third place.

Though deep, yet clear ; though gentle, yet not dull :
Strong without rage ; without o'erflowing full.

But I conceive there are two reasons why this has not the disagreeable effect that might have been expected. Without is a compound word, and has much the same sound as though it were two distinct words ; both the syllables are distinct, and sounded with nearly the same stress of voice : add to this that both the foregoing and the following words are exceedingly strong and emphatical ; so that, in fact, the first foot is a Trochee, and the second an Iambic ; and consequently the harmony is sufficiently preserved.

A weak, obscure or unaccented syllable where the measure requires a full and distinct one, is always a defect in the poetry.

And an immortal crown.

Doddridge.

Here it may be observed that one of the words and or an requires an emphasis beyond what is natural natural or usual, and this circumstance renders the line unharmonious and disagreeable. Here we may likewise assign the reason why long words have generally an unhappy effect in poetry; the rapidity of pronunciation renders many of the syllables exceedingly short and obscure, and when any of those coincide with the even syllables they greatly interrupt the proper cadency and harmony of the verse.

* In poetic measure the two short syllables in the natural or proper dactyles coalesce in pronunciation, and only fill the place of one obscure or unaccented syllable.

His bright appearances, or footsteps trace.

Milton.

To beggarly vile appetites descend.

Young.

And when these obscure syllables fall on the end of the line the effect is still more unhappy.

Inhospitable appeared and desolate.

Milton.

The first of men in sovereign misery.

Pope's Homer.

But from our comment on the comedy.

Young.

The addition of an obscure syllable at the end of the line is another defect which ought to be avoided. The words power, prayer, heaven, even, &c. are indeed to be considered as monosyllables, and therefore may be admitted; but this licence seems to be carried too far in the following instances, and many more that might be given.

And squeeze my hand, and bid me come to-morrow.

And moated round with fathomless destruction.

Young.

A distinct and emphatical syllable may be introduced almost in any place without the least injury or hazard to the verse; but weak and obscure syllables should be avoided as much as possible.

A whole line may consist of distinct monosyllables and sound much better than one which has a long word in it.

To push me from the scene, or hiss me there.

Young.

Vext when he spoke, but yet they heard him speak.

Pope.

Whilst all the stars that round her burn.

Addison.

Nor is there, perhaps, an odd place in the whole line but what may admit of an emphatical word, though not of an accented syllable.

O dart from thence one cheering ray,

And turn my midnight into day.

Flatman.

Many of the defects above mentioned have been admitted, or at least suffered to pass, for the sake of the greater variety; but I am persuaded that, without these, the introduction of the Trochee as above exemplified, the proper mixture of monosyllables and polysyllables, the different position of the pauses, the proper emphasis, and in general a mode of expression adapted to the sense, will, in all cases, afford a sufficient, a pleasing, and I was going to say an infinite variety in the construction of English Verse.

And was the ransom paid? it was: and paid
(What can exalt the bounty more) for you.
The sun beheld it—No, the shocking scene
Drove back his chariot: midnight veiled his face;
Not such as this; not such as nature makes:
A midnight new! a dread eclipse (without Opposing spheres) from her Creator's frown!
Sun, didst thou fly thy Maker's pain? or start
At that enormous load of human guilt,

Which bowed his blessed head; o'erwhelmed
his cross;

Made groan the centre, burst earth's marble
womb,

With pangs, strange pangs! delivered of her dead.

Hell howled, and heaven that hour let fall a tear:

Heaven wept, that man might smile, heaven

bled, that man

Might never die.—————

Young.

The Trochaic measure is less majestic and serious than the Iambic.

Praise, O praise the name divine;
Praise him at the hallowed shrine;
Let the firmament on high
To its Maker's praise reply.
Let his acts and power supreme,
To your songs suggest a theme;
Be the harp no longer mute,
Sound the trumpet, touch the lute.

Let the organ in his praise

Learn its loudest note to raise,

And the cymbal's varied sound

From the vaulted roof rebound.

All, who vital breath enjoy,

In his praise that breath employ;

And in one great chorus join;

Praise, O praise the name divine.

Merrick.

In the Trochaic measure the odd syllables must have the distinction, just as the even ones had in the Iambic.

A Trochaic verse consists of one or more Trochees terminated by a full or accented syllable, and admits of little or no variation.

A short or obscure syllable is sometimes added, as a kind of splayfooted rhyme, at the end of the line.

Jesus,

Jesus, full of all compassion,
Hear thy humble suppliant's cry :
Let me know thy great salvation,
Lest I languish, faint, and die.
In the world of endless ruin,
Let it never, Lord, be said,

The Anapestic measure is more quick and lively, and therefore best suited to songs and trivia subjects.

From Lincoln to London rode forth our young squire,
To bring down a wife whom the swains might admire ;
But in spite of whatever the mortal could say,
The goddess objected the length of the way.
To give up the opera, the park and the ball,
For to view the stag's horns in an old country
hall :
To have neither China nor India to see !
Nor a laceman to plague in a morning,—not she.
To forsake the dear playhouse, Quin, Garrick,
and Clive,
Who by dint of mere humour had kept her alive :
To forego the full box for his lonesome abode,
O heavens ! she should faint, she should die on the road.
To be sure she could breathe no where else than in town ;
Thus she talked like a wit, and he looked like a clown :
But while honest Harry despaired to succeed,
A coach with a coronet trailed her to Tweed.

" Here's a soul that perished suing
" For the boasted Saviour's aid."
Saved ! the deed shall spread new glory
Through the shining worlds above ;
Angels sing the pleasing story,
All enraptured with thy love. Turner.

Yes, these are the scenes where with Iris I
stray'd,
But short was her sway for so lovely a maid !
In the bloom of her youth to a cloister she run,
In the bloom of her graces, too fair for a nun !
Ill grounded, no doubt, a devotion must prove,
So fatal to beauty, so killing to love !
Ye shepherds, give ear to my lay,
And take no more care of my sheep ;
They have nothing to do but to stray,
I have nothing to do but to weep.
Yet do not my folly reprove,
She was fair, and my passion begun ;
She smiled—and I could not but love ;
She is faithless, and I am undone.
I have found out a gift for my fair,
I have found where the wood pigeons breed ;
But let me that plunder forbear,
She will say 'twas a barbarous deed.
For he ne'er could be true she averred,
Who would rob a poor bird of its young :
And I loved her the more when I heard
Such tenderness fall from her tongue.

Shenston.

In the pure Anapestic the distinction of accent or stress of the voice lies on every third syllable.

In the bloom of her youth to a cloister she run,
In the bloom of her graces, too fair for a nun.
Not a pine in my grove is there seen,
But with tendrils of woodbine is bound.

By dropping a syllable the first foot is frequently converted into an Iambic.

With her how I strayed amid fountains and bowers,
Or loitered behind, and collected the flowers.

In this measure a slightly accented syllable may fall out of place and be no great interruption to the harmony.

Now because mistress Lucy to thee is well known,
But the while honest Harry despaired of success.

In the structure of this verse care however should be taken that no unusual effort be necessary in pronunciation to place the stress of the voice on the proper syllable.

For to view the stag's horns in an old country hall.

An obscure syllable or a short word is sometimes added to the end of the line, in this as well as in the other measures.

And Harlequin too, 'tis in vain to require it,
And she wondered how folks had the face to desire it.
